

The Community Food Security Coalition presents a new workshop:

COMMUNITY FOOD ASSESSMENTS A TOOL FOR CHANGE

Don't miss this opportunity to learn about a creative way to highlight food-related resources and needs, promote collaborations and community participation, and create lasting change. Participatory workshops will cover the nuts and bolts and potential benefits of conducting a Community Food Assessment.

Community Food Assessments can help you:

- ☉ Initiate new projects with community support and involvement.
- ☉ Build the case for additional resources.
- ☉ Advocate for change in your community and on a larger scale.
- ☉ Engage community members in learning about food and health.
- ☉ Gain a greater understanding of local needs and resources.
- ☉ Empower community members to create lasting change.

The workshops will cover:

- ☉ Examples of Community Food Assessments and their impacts.
- ☉ Tips on how to start an assessment.
- ☉ Information and resources available.
- ☉ Possible outcomes for your community.

Workshop participants will receive:

A comprehensive guidebook on conducting Community Food Assessments and other related materials. Groups who choose to conduct assessments can receive additional support from CFSC.

Workshops will be led by experienced trainers who have worked closely with community groups to conduct assessments.

Kami Pothukuchi teaches urban planning at Wayne State University in Detroit.

Fernando Ona is a medical anthropologist and health educator for the City and County of San Francisco.
